

Being a Tryhard

New: Argument

Title "Is going try hard good."

Subject: Gym

Topic: should be going try hard good

Jargon: try hard, athletic and Bully

Have you ever been in gym class trying to run laps for the beginning and decided to sprint them to be athletic. And then all of a sudden out of the blue you hear "Try hard" out of the corner of your ear. You think to yourself what so bad about trying hard in gym, like you're supposed to do it; what's wrong-- but you keep sprinting anyway.

Here's the question is going try hard good. First let's define some terms PE means gym or physical education. Try hard means to try as hard as you.

On one hand, going try hard is good. That way you are getting all of your exercise out of gym class. You might hear this from your gym teacher. But it is good to try at least a little bit in gym because if you don't do any other sports or trying in those sports you might never learn leadership, playing as a team and to push yourself or how to stay healthy. This bring me to another fact if you're not doing anything athletic how are you supposed to stay healthy. Some times for some people there's only one moment where you get your exercise in the day: gym.

On the other hand, it is bad to go try hard. I guess for some reason in these people's mind going try hard is bad. In fact, for some other people if you try hard in gym you will get mocked, but when they do it it's perfectly fine. Try hard is a playful word to sometimes people just say it for kicks and giggles and have no intention of hurting others feelings. Also in gym if you become too aggressive and loud it can become very annoying.

So at the end of this argument I have concluded with the yes. Going try hard is good. When people finally realize that calling people try hard is bullying, that's when people will stop. The other reason why I believe this is because it gives you a very good amount of exercise; also, that it can help you with teamwork. Now before I was this argument please think to yourself if you call people try hard is it nice to do that. If you don't please start to try to stop the word because it is very mean and harsh
